Torii Teller readership survey hits the streets

by Gunnery Sgt. John Olmstead
Torii Teller Staff

The Marine Corps Public Affairs Office is conducting a readership survey for the Torii Teller newspaper, during the first two weeks of November, to determine the needs and desires of its readers.

This year the Torii Teller has gone through several major changes. These changes include the conversion from a magazine to newspaper format. There has also been page design and layout changes.

To ensure its reader's needs are being met, surveys will be distributed randomly. A thousand surveys will be distributed in mailboxes. In addition, the survey will be published in the newspaper for two weeks. Readers only need to fill out the form, fold it and drop it off at the post office. No postage is necessary.

"Reader's comments are what we need to make changes in our paper," said Gunnery Sgt. Constance Dillard, public affairs chief. "Without feedback, we cannot directly assess our current newspaper, as to whether it is meeting the needs of the service members, families and base employees."

"We are tasked to provide fair and even coverage to all of our different audiences on base," she said. "It can be difficult when each service member, unit, family, and base employee wants to read something different."

The importance of the survey cannot be overstressed," said Dillard. "In order to satisfy readership needs, the Public Affairs Office must identify them.

"The only way to identify a readers needs is survey them," she said. "Readers must tell us what they want in the paper, and we will strive to meet their needs and desires."

The survey is broken down by demographic information and questions. The first section of the survey identifies personal status such as active duty service member, family member, civilian employee or retired. It also identifies individual units, ages and gender.

The second part of the survey covers what each reader likes the most, and their second favorite. This helps the newspaper staff target their efforts on these types of stories.

"If our readers respond saying they want to read more sports, then we'll write more sports," said Dillard. "Currently the only problem we have is the limited space in our newspaper. We

Values stressed

by Capt. Jeffrey K. Sammons
Public Affairs Officer

I saw some extremely important values demonstrated last weekend from a very unlikely source at a very unusual location.

I don't want to have anyone read this editorial under false pretenses, so I'll start off by telling everyone what the values were not. They were not values focused on increasing individual fame or wealth, but did involve an age-old American infatuation – winning.

The setting for this "earth shattering" realization was a station sports field. The game played was soccer.

As I watched the two teams warm-up prior to the start of the game, I couldn't help but notice a marked difference in the skill of each team's individual players.

The one team was definitely superior in the individual fundamentals of soccer – dribbling, passing, and shooting. This was a team that had practiced countless drills in order to develop each member's skill level.

From the starting whistle they dominated the game not by their individual skill, but by playing as a team. They knew where their team members were on the field, looked for the open ones and passed them the ball. They did not play individually, but as a team. They shut out their opponents – who played as eleven individuals.

This is not to say there weren't some great individual plays from the losing team, because there were some.

One such play was toward the beginning of the game. The losing team had a lone team member driving the ball toward the goal through a nest of defenders when he went down. An opposing team member helped him back up and checked to see if he was hurt.

Later in the second half, a similar play happened when the winning team was heading toward the goal and a defender stopped the drive by sending an offensive player airborne, causing him to land chest first and slide for a few feet. The difference was that the losing defender turned her back on the downed opponent and walked away.

The first value I observed last weekend was you must have teamwork in order to win. On the job, at home, or in sports, teamwork equates to success.

The second value demonstrated was sportsmanship is just as important as winning, maybe even more so.

The teacher of this lesson in life was not a wise old man on a mountain, but a Japanese youth soccer team made up of 10- to 12-year-olds.

TRAP team conducts four-minute mission

by Cpl. Derek A. Shoemake
26th Marine Expeditionary Unit

DOGANBEY, Turkey — On the morning of Oct. 18, it took Hospitalman Jacob Longoria about 15 minutes to eat breakfast. That afternoon, it took just four minutes for Longoria and other members of the Tactical Recovery of Aircraft and Personnel team to insert into a hostile area and rescue two downed pilots.

Though the mission was only a training evolution held during NATO exercise Destined Glory 2000, there was nothing simulated about the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable) TRAP team's speed.

The goal of most TRAP missions is simple: rescue the pilots, crew, passengers and many times, recover the aircraft.

In this scenario, two pilots were down in enemy territory. In their first opportunity to perform a TRAP since their deployment began, 2ndLt. Robert Dinero's men were sent in.

"We spent less than four minutes on the Childcare fees increase

by Cpl. Ryan O'Hare
Torii Teller Staff

Due to an annual Department of Defense order, which is accommodating the inflation for cost of living requirements of direct child caregivers, the Child Development Center had to slightly increase its fees.

"We did not bring in enough money last year to cover caregiver salaries," said Amy Davis, children/youth/teen manager. "That is why it was needed to add a minimal increase to this year's parent fees, to ensure that we do not end up with the same issue."

According to Davis, it is only a

$1 to 3 increase in weekly fees, and all fees are based on total family income.

The fee increase is set up so lower income households with children do not pay as much as higher income households. The fees also depend on how many hours a week the child is enrolled at the center.

"The air station Commanding Officer has been very understanding of the changes," said Davis. "He is in agreement with the way the fees are set up and understands that everyone can not afford to pay the same amount of money for child care."

The Child Development Center offers a chart showing exactly what category each household falls under.

According to each of the six categories, the fees vary and are applied accordingly. Families who fall into the first category will not pay as much as those who fall in the last one, said Davis.

In addition to the increase in child care fees, the School Age Care program is also adjusted according to family income.

"The School Age Care program began recently, and falls under all Department of Defense regulations for accredited child care programs," said Oral Arrington, Youth Activity Program supervisor. "This new program follows more than 30 regulations for child care, and the program promotes teacher, child and parent interaction, as well as study lessons and a variety of nutritionally approved meals."

The School Age Care program is taking the place of the "Brunch Bunch" and the Rec-R-Us programs.

According to Davis, both the Child Care and School Age Care programs have received a slight increase in fees according to family income from the DoD. This increase is not going toward the overhead costs of the center or supplies needed for teaching, it merely helps the center support the people who inspire the children everyday. A small price to pay, for the well being of a child.

For more information on child care programs and fees, call The Child Development Center at 253-5584.

TAVSC changes name

by Sgt. Raymie G. Cruz
Torii Teller Staff

Throughout the Marine Corps, Training Audio Visual Support Centers have been renamed Combat Visual Information Centers.

Marine Corps Order P3104.1, the Marine Corps Visual Information and Combat Camera Support Manual makes this change to better represent the section's mission.

"The name change will focus the video and photography on war-fighters," said Capt. Jeffrey Sammons, CVIC officer-in-charge.

The CVIC supports Marines not only with photography, but visual information such as photographic training aids and video production.

"We're shifting our focus from the traditional support, such as issuing equipment, to providing commands with visual imagery for operational and training purposes," said Staff Sgt. Timothy LeMaster, CVIC staff noncommissioned officer-in-charge. "Photography and video products taken from accidents, deployments and training evolutions can provide visual information in related classes."

The CVIC also supports units with training and operational videos and by taking historical, documentary and promotion photos.

"One of the things that has happened in our field is that we're trying to get away from the normal TAVSC responsibilities of handling training," LeMaster said. "Now our field consists of photography, video and graphic arts."

According to LeMaster, CVIC can provide units with visual information and training aides, but cannot provide the training itself.

"In Iwakuni, we're turning our focus toward providing documentation of training and operational evolutions," LeMaster said. "We do cover a lot of ceremonies and provide studio work, but we want to use our skills more effectively on this base."

As the transition continues, CVIC will be able to further their support to station units through future deployments and training exercises.

"Our name change more effectively represents our mission," LeMaster said. "Transitioning into operational use of imagery and visual products vice being seen as only a training tool."

Breaking bad habits

Navy Lt. Heather Gilchrist teaches the Tobacco Cessation class the effects of long term tobacco use, through pictures and displays.

by Cpl. Ryan O'Hare
Torii Teller Staff

Breaking bad habits can be hard to do, but thanks to the Branch Medical Clinics' Tobacco Cessation Program, help is available.

The Tobacco Cessation Program is designed to educate tobacco users about nicotine dependency and the psychological effects it has on the user, and help them break the habit.

"We want people to understand what the addiction is," said Navy Lt. Heather Gilchrist, health promotion division officer. "Only then will they understand how to quit."

The class is very interactive and each person discusses why they started using tobacco and their main driving force behind quitting.

"I want to quit smoking, not only to lead a healthier lifestyle, but to stop wasting money on something that's destructive," said Lance Cpl. Todd Wimberly, communications technician from Tallahassee, Fla. "It's going to be tough, but it's time to do it. This class has helped me understand what I need to do and how to quit for good"

"Many of the people who attend this course have tried to quit before," said Gilchrist. "We teach them proven techniques to accomplish their goal."

The class is divided into four sessions, each one hour long. The first sessions' objective is to make the participants understand why they smoke and how it affects them mentally and physically.

"We teach them about the chemical addiction, habit and psychological dependency of tobacco use," said Gilchrist.

When the class meets for the second time, the topic of the session is how to handle the first few days of being nicotine free, concentrating on cravings, tension, lightheadedness and coughing.

"Knowing what to expect will help to make it through the initial stages of quitting," said Gilchrist. "The first few days are the hardest to get through."

The third session teaches how to stay off tobacco permanently, once the habit is broken.

"Even though the nicotine is out of the body, the habit and psychological dependency is still evident," said Gilchrist.

The fourth and last session of the Tobacco Cessation class discusses how to enjoy staying off tobacco and how to avoid relapsing.

"Once a person gets off nicotine, it doesn't mean they won't go back to it at some point," said Gilchrist. "We want them to have other alternatives to turn too, in case the craving comes back."

According to Gilchrist, the program has been very successful in helping people break the habit of tobacco use. She attributes the high success rate to people understanding what nicotine addiction is, and how it affects their lives and the people around them.

"Different people have different reasons for quitting tobacco use," said Gilchrist. "Whatever the reason is, we are here to help them do it."

For more information on the Tobacco Cessation Program call the Branch Medical Clinic at 253-3266.

deck, and that's exactly how you want it to happen," said Dinero, TRAP team commander. "In the real thing, you could be in a hostile and uncertain environment. The shorter amount of time you spend on the deck and in those surroundings, the better."

Some of that expedience is owed to Hospitalman Longoria, the team's primary Corpsman, and his partner HM3 Jason Jeffries. Once a TRAP team establishes security and locates the pilots or crew, it is the Corpsmen's job to assess any injuries. In just seconds, Sailors like 24-year old Longoria must determine if those injured can be transported immediately, or if they need on-scene treatment before being moved.

In the recent scenario, the Marines who acted as the downed pilots were given mock injuries. Based on their examination, Longoria and Jeffries told Dinero the men could be moved instantly.

"The first thing you're looking for is damage to the spine or skull," said Longoria, a Houston native. "If we're in enemy territory or taking fire, we obviously do not have a lot of time. We make our call and go. It's life over limb."

The Houston native said he is confident in his ability to make those split decisions.

"Any time you are dealing with someone's life, that's a major responsibility," he said. "If that responsibility does not weigh heavily on you, then you need to look at yourself as a Corpsman. You have to know what you're doing."

In addition to the Corpsmen's performance, Dinero said the MEU's Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 264 provided the aerial support that made their mission possible. A CH-53E Super Stallion from the squadron, operating in its first exercise since being cleared for flight after a Marine Corps-wide grounding of the aircraft, provided transportation for the team.

"The support from (HMM-264) was awesome," said Dinero "They got us within a few hundred yards of the pilots. So we were right there when the aircraft landed."

Though his team performed well in their four-minute mission, Dinero said he would like to give his Marines and Sailors more training.

"I think getting a chance to train for this is important," said Dinero. "A lot of the TRAP team's success relies on muscle memory. You have to be able to do it with your eyes closed. I think my guys showed some good muscle memory on this mission. This doesn't mean we can stop training, it just means we're where we're suppose to be. But we have to train to stay there."

NCO uses leadership to acquire goals

by Sgt. Raymie G. Cruz
Torii Teller Staff

This year, the Noncommissioned Officer of the Year title was awarded to a corporal who uses leadership in every aspect of his life.

Corporal Christopher Stanley, an H&HS Air Traffic Control radar technician, took this year's second NCO of the Quarter board and was selected to compete for the NCO of the Year.

"When selecting a candidate for the board, we knew he would be the one who could take it," said Staff Sgt. Jerry Howard, Ground Electronics Maintenance Division radar chief. "There are those who have what it takes, and he is one of them. His physical performance is only matched by his mental performance."

"If you're selected to go on a board, obviously you're doing something right," said Stanley a Belleville, Ill., native. "Getting to the board is half the battle."

Knowing the competition was going to be tough, Stanley mentally and physically prepared himself for the board.

"Unlike the quarter board, the NCO of the Year board consisted of a wall locker, and junk on the bunk inspection, drill, questions and answers and a physical fitness test," he said.

According to Stanley, when the board was over, he knew that he had given it his all and that was good enough for him.

"The first thing I was asked when I left the board was how I did," Stanley said. "I said, 'I gave myself the chance to take it.' I was still surprised that I won."

According to the radar technician, the boards aren't to see who the best Marine is, but a learning experience.

"The boards instill a lot of confidence in you," he said. "They helped me gain the confidence to stand in front of my superiors and be judged."

Although the 22-year-old has enjoyed his time in the Marine Corps, his plans are to get out, finish college and pursue his goal in becoming a teacher.

"Chances are I'm going to get out, because I plan on becoming a history teacher," Stanley said. "But at this time I feel that reenlistment is still an option for me."

According to Stanley, the leadership skills he has acquired in the Marine Corps will help him in the future.

"The leadership experience I received in the Marine Corps will not only help me to teach," he said, "but to have a sincere concern for my students' welfare."

Marine faces challenges head-on

by Sgt. Raymie G. Cruz
Torii Teller Staff

In boards held throughout the year, one Marine stood out to be selected as the Marine of the year.

Lance Cpl. Nels Forde, an H&HS military policeman assigned to the Provost Marshal's K-9 unit, saw the opportunity to be the Marine of the Year as a challenge the Marine Corps had for him.

The challenges are why the Madison, Wisc., native joined the Corps.

"When I was 23 years old, I had worked some odd jobs and decided I needed more of a challenge," said the 25-year-old. "The Marine Corps offered me the challenges, knowledge and travel experience I was looking for."

Like any other Marine who goes up for Marine of the Year, Forde had to go through the Marine of the Quarter before qualifying. To qualify, he won the fourth quarter board.

When it came time for his final board this year, Forde said he knew walking out of the board, he had an edge over the others.

"It was close from start to finish, but I felt I had an extra edge," Forde said. "I kept a positive frame of mind throughout the process.

Being eligible to go on the board was one more challenge I've had to face in the Corps."

During his time in the Marine Corps, Forde has been pleased with what he has experienced so far. Joining the Marine Corps in February 1999, he came in with an open contract and was given the job as a military policeman.

The job was something he was already familiar with, because when he was in high school, he had been involved with his city's local police department.

"I was involved with the Police Explorers," Forde said. "It offered weekly classes and gave us the opportunity to work security at local parades, festivals and other various functions."

When Forde went to school for his current occupation, members of his class were asked to volunteer for K-9.

"I saw K-9 as another challenge and was more than willing to accept," Forde said. "I had to go up on a board for that, and that was when the boards started for me."

While in the Corps, Forde says he has learned valuable lessons that he uses every day.

"Success is only meeting the challenge beyond every achievement," said Forde. "As much as motivation is drilled into every Marine, it's the key. If you're not motivated, you will not get anywhere."

The riding club is open six days a week, and provides everything from beginning riding lessons, to boarding facilities for horse owners.

Tomomi Kawanaka, riding instructor and horse owner, says what she likes best about her job, is seeing new people coming out to the club and getting their first experience with the animals.

"A lot of people in Japan haven't had the chance to see many horses up close, let alone get to ride them," Kawanaka said. "It's rewarding to teach people how to ride these animals and see smiles on their faces."

Historically, horseback riding in Japan has been a sport enjoyed by the upper class, but thanks to the reasonable prices offered at the Iwakuni Riding Club, everyone can enjoy it.

Once a year the club is host to an equestrian competition, bringing horse lovers from around Japan to enjoy the day filled with activities. They even host flea markets selling fruits, vegetables and other gifts, and allow visitors to pet and ride the horses.

Because of the gentle nature of the horses at the stables, the club has even been used as a form of animal therapy, for people with illnesses and handicaps.

"We enjoy having people come out and visit us," said Masako Tanaka, owner and manager. "If you have never been near a horse, I encourage you to experience them, it's a really good feeling."

Each horse at the club is taken care of meticulously and available for riding from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., every day except Monday. The prices vary depending on the length of the ride and if the customer desires actual lessons.

Kawanaka, who has been an instructor at the club for more than three years and even traveled to England to gain further experience, recommends horseback riding to anyone who loves animals and enjoys the outdoors.

Toy Story 2 (G)
Rated G. (93 minutes)
In this sequel to the 1995 blockbuster, Woody is kidnapped by an evil toy collector, who plans to sell him to a Japanese toy museum. Meanwhile, the rest of the toy troupe undergoes a thrilling crosstown adventure to locate their kidnapped friend and restore him to his rightful owner.

Bring It On (PG-13)
Rated PG-13 for sex-related material and language. (99 minutes)
In a comic face-off between die-hard cheerleaders, Torrance Shipman, must show her team how to beat out their rival squad, the Clovers, in the national cheerleading championships.

The Watcher (R)
Rated R for violence and language. (93 minutes)
A stylish thriller set in Chicago. The story follows Joel Campbell, an ex-police detective, who a dangerous serial killer has formed an attachment to, luring him into a deadly game of cat-and-mouse.

Nurse Betty (R)
Rated R for strong violence, pervasive language and a scene of sexuality. (112 minutes)
Betty, who fantasizes about a life like that on a soap opera, escapes into her fantasy, when her husband brings an illegal business deal into their home and is murdered. Renée Zellweger is utterly charming, while Morgan Freeman and Chris Rock are perfectly suited for their offbeat hit men roles.

have the option to add more pages to accommodate additional stories or delete an unwanted section to make room for what our readers want."

The final question in the readership survey is where readers pick-up their copy of the Torii Teller. This will see if our distribution is adequate and needs to be changed.

"Every readership survey we get back counts," said Dillard. "We are looking for trends in the survey's we receive so we can make changes to better serve our community."

Once an adequate amount of survey's are returned, each will be grouped by demographics. Each result has a direct result on how each groups voice is expressed.

"Each individual survey is like a grain of sand," said Capt. Jeffrey Sammons, Public Affairs Officer. "But when you combine them, you have a ton of material to build a sound foundation."

However, if the Public Affairs Office only receives responses back from one part of our community, then the feedback may not adequately voice the opinion of the entire community.

The more people who respond will effectively be setting the content of this paper," said Sammons. "Your newspaper is an evolving process, it's not set in stone, we want to shape it into what you want to read."

Lancers run over Tuggers in 27-6 victory

by Sgt. Raymie G. Cruz
Torii Teller Staff

The American Football Conference kicked off Monday night football on the air station, when the Lancers and the SE Tuggers took to the gridiron.

After the kick-off, the Lancers were able to drive down field in three plays for the six, and capitalized the score with the extra point.

"Early in the game, their defense was playing man-to-man," said Lancer coach, Robert Sanford. "So we spread them out, letting the quarterback have the option to run.

When the Tuggers received the ball, they looked for retaliation, but were unable to convert a first down.

On the Lancers' next possession, the offense seemed unstoppable as they scored another TD and topped it off with an extra point.

In the final seconds of the half, the Tuggers pulled together and marched down field as quarterback Nicholas Kinner rolled out and found an open receiver for their only score of the game.

In the second half, the game plan of the Lancers was a lot like the first. Rolling left or right, the quarterback was able to scramble from oncoming defenders to find open receivers or room to run, leading to another score.

The Lancer secondary played like Ali Baba's 40 thieves, as they picked off the Tuggers and handed the ball over to their offense.

On the hike, Lancers' starting quarterback, David Morales, rolled out of the pocket to his left, pump-faked oncoming defenders and ran the ball for an additional 20 yards.

While heading for the sidelines, he was taken out of the game with an injury by the Tugger defense.

Replacement quarterback, Dan White, took the helm and completed the drive with a circus-like touchdown pass, to put the Tuggers away.

"All I wanted to do was make sure I didn't throw the ball out of the back of the end zone," White said.

The pass was originally intended for Lancers' receiver, Ben Malmanger, but was tipped by a Tugger defender appearing unreachable, but the Lancer offense had been connecting all night. As the ball fell Lancers' receiver Mark Paliotta caught the tipped pass for the score to clinch the victory.

"They're a decent team," said Kinner. "Not practicing hurt our team tonight. Practice may have made it a closer game."

The victory takes the Lancers to 4-1 on the season and drops a loss in the Tuggers lap.

"Our goal is to build some momentum throughout the season and go into the playoffs with the best record," Sanford said.
